About the Program

As the world’s industries become increasingly global, the demand for graduates with a background in international studies, such as Asian Studies, has grown. The B.A. in Asian Studies drives the FIU mission to foster greater international understanding through collaborative engagement with our local and global communities.

The degree is designed for students who wish to pursue a career that focuses on the region. Classes emphasize a multidisciplinary approach of study and cover language and culture, philosophy and religion, as well as arts and literature. With an in-depth look at China, Japan, India, and Central and Southeast Asia, the program also includes coursework on issues in history, politics, geography, sociology/anthropology, international relations, education and business in the global environment. Moreover, classes provide relevant and current instruction, advising and experiential opportunities. Through this program, students become intellectual analysts of the region's innate culture and shared history in order to discern current and future demands of industries worldwide.
